

Marco Marsili graduated in Political Science and International Relations and in Institutional communication, both cum laude. Dr Marsili holds a PhD in History, Security Studies and Defence, and is taking a second PhD in Political Science and International Relations: Security and Defense from IEP-UCP under a FCT scholarship. He holds research positions in major civil and military institutions in Portugal, where he conducts his research in the broad area of international relations, security and defence, with a specific focus on international law, international humanitarian law, fundamental human rights, terrorism, counter-terrorism, hybrid warfare and unconventional conflicts.

He is the principal investigator of projects financed by the Portuguese Ministry of Defence and foreign donors. He is also member of the NATO Exploratory Team on Human Security established by the NATO Science and Technology Organization. He has a NATO and EU security clearance. Recently, Dr Marsili was engaged as cyber defence and cyber security expert in two studies commissioned by the European Defence Agency and the European Commission. He is the recipient of international grants, fellowships, prizes and awards, among which stands up the Seal of Excellence of the European Commission in 2021. He participates and attends many international conferences and workshops; he chairs panels and is also member of scientific and organizing committees. Dr Marsili held also corporate positions and served as public official and election observer for the OSCE/ODIHR. He is member of the International Society of Military Sciences (ISMS), of the International Political Science Association (IPSA), of the affiliated Portuguese Political Science Association (APCP), of the European Consortium for Political Research (ECPR), and of the European Sociological Association (ESA).